

Tax Design Challenge

introduction

Taxes can be a daunting task for most Americans. We're on a deadline. We're worried we might owe a lot of money. We're concerned we will make a mistake. We know that we could spend hours gathering documents, figuring out the numbers and filling out forms. Sometimes it just seems easier to hire an accountant or pay for a service to help.

The sense of security, time savings and assistance that tax preparation brands and companies like Turbo Tax, Jackson Hewitt, and H&R Block provide, ease our minds and help make the process easier. Taxpayers feel a level of trust that their return will be completed accurately and on time with a maximum return, but many cannot afford this luxury and are forced to go it alone.

opportunity

What if, in the taxpayer experience of the future, the IRS was able to provide these services free of charge? What if taxpayers could feel that same level of trust as they do with paid preparer services? And what if more taxpayers could receive even greater benefits by using this new system?

We believe that the IRS can offer an improved taxpayer experience—one that makes the process easier, more understandable, more efficient and less intimidating. We believe that this opportunity could be available to all taxpayers rather than only to those who can afford a consultant or special service.

This new user experience can benefit taxpayers and well as the IRS.

benefits to the taxpayer

- free service
- less time spent preparing taxes
- a filing assistant to facilitate easier filing
- accurately calculated taxes for a maximum refund
- ability to connect and manage personal finances to increase savings and financial stability
- ability to utilize personal tax records and financial information to achieve home ownership or other life goals

benefits for the IRS

- improved communication with taxpayers
- improved accuracy and efficiency of returns
- improved perception of the IRS as a “partner” in filing

the goal

The primary goal is to make it easier for people to manage their tax responsibilities, and use their own financial data to make informed and effective decisions about their personal finances. This can be achieved in the following ways:

- creating an online user experience that is friendly and easy to use for personal tax preparation
- providing free tax tools and services
- offering online planning tools and a user interface to manage and track personal finances
- offering a brand platform from the taxpayer perspective with a personality and interface that is easier to relate to
- offering the ability to use tax and financial data to plan for life changes, home ownership and other milestones that impact life goals

the concept

Create an interface and personality for the IRS taxpayer user experience that is more relatable, easier to use and always accessible to help improve, evolve and change taxpayer interaction with, and perception of the IRS.

Public Perception Current State	—————>	Public Perception Future State

the solution

IRiS the Taxpayer Assistance Center Mobile Office

Friendly, relatable, helpful, knowledgeable and easily accessible.

the solution

IRiS is the face of the Taxpayer Assistance Center mobile office. The branding and website design is clean, clear and friendly. The content is rich. A visual icon system and bold color palette allows users to identify and find what they need quickly and easily.

IRiS helps the taxpayer do more all in one place:

- make or schedule payments, check refund status, store tax records
- access and use the most up-to-date tax forms with an easier form identification system
- build a tax profile: taxpayers can take a short survey to help identify the tax forms and information that are right for them

IRiS: The TAC Mobile Office

IRiS is your complete tax and financial solution

- a dedicated website and app for keeping tax records and tracking expenses, tools for planning your financial future, tax assistance and financial advice
- an online interface that allows taxpayers to input, scan, store or link tax information: W2, bank/investment statements, proof of health insurance documentation, donation and purchase receipts, tax forms, etc., for seamless tax preparation and financial planning
- a highly secure site with password protected account access where no one can access to your personal information—only you can generate a report to review and submit for filing taxes or other financial purposes

of taxpayers

We've evolved into a society that increasingly does everything online. We bank, shop, listen to music, watch tv, learn, share and interact socially—all online. We rely on many apps that help us to do all of these things faster, easier and more conveniently.

As society shifts to all things digital and the baby boomer generation shrinks, the online user experience has become increasingly more important. The majority of present and future taxpayers are millennial who are very connected and have come to expect a simple and fast way to get the information or job done online.

75.4 million

US population ages
18 to 34 in 2015

“Millennials have surpassed Baby Boomers as the nation’s largest living generation.”

—Pew Research Center, April 2016

a new generation
of taxpayers

“For most of this generation, in other words, the digital revolution does not represent disruption. It represents the norm and, to a significant degree, their generation’s opportunity. Perhaps as a consequence, few Millennials are worried much about privacy, and particularly not about the data kept by government or corporations.”

—“Digital lives of Millennials,” Pew Research Center, April 2016

“This generation may also be burdened with a staggering amount of student debt, and have had difficulty finding a job or boosting their salaries during and after the Great Recession. All those factors mean that the financial strategies that worked for their Boomer or Gen X parents, may not work for them.”

—“For Millennials Goal is Financial Freedom,” USA Today, April 2015

Based on these societal changes, the viability and need for a new user experience for taxpayers online is imminent and the IRS should be at the forefront of delivering it.

Thank you!

We appreciate your consideration, and as taxpayers, look forward to utilizing a progressive, efficient and cost-saving platform such as IRiS that meets our financial needs.
